“ I just want to express how deeply grieved I feel at the loss of Buddy. I can't begin to say how sorry I feel for y'all, his children. Having experienced so much death in my family from a very early age, you'd think I'd be a bit more jaded, but the truth is, it always cuts to the soul. We all grieve differently, but the loss of a parent will always be with us. Pain and sorrow are part of life, but death seems to garner much of those emotions. He was to me, so much more than a cousin. He was my Godfather, my Parran, someone I looked up to ever since I can remember. He showed me how to use the cash register at the grocery, he helped with math assignments in grade school, he rode me on his bike down South Scott St. by the grocery, he instilled in me the love of Fats Domino (because I always seemed to be underfoot while he was listening to the radio), he taught me to drive a stick shift in his old black VW Beetle, he baited hooks for Sue and I while he helped us fish with him off the seawall in the city, he always made us laugh, he flew kites higher than I had ever seen, he took the time with two little girls who had lost their dad. He was an anchor in our life. I'll miss him so very much. He and y'all will always be in my prayers. I love you.

Oh, I feel the exact things. I told Josh how every time I hear Walking to New Orleans I think of him, Algebra, I think of him. Even though we were so young, I remember him explaining the religious part of death to us when daddy died. He recently told me that as soon as he got the call, he and Janet left Connecticut and drove non stop to New Orleans. He was such a huge part of our lives. I'm going to miss his texts and calls. I got in the habit of checking with him when it looked like we were on the brink of a war because he knew so much about that. When I was in the hospital after having Ray, he came in the room and looked at me and said "you did good, Susie". So many wonderful memories, those are just a few. I love you, Buddy.
