“ As I sit tonite and think about Ms Pauline, she was one of the dying breed of women who give everything for their family and made little time for herself. From the crack of dawn to the evening meal, this woman was always doing something for her family. The morning routine was getting everyone up and out the door to work and young Becky ready and out the door and walk her down the end of the drive to catch the bus. I sure her day was full of cleaning the house and washing and hanging out the clothes. She had to make sure that Chester, her husband, and any of the boys, Danny or Gary, who work at the shop, got their dailey lunch. And there was always the trips to the bank for deposits and the errands to run. I can remember the afternoons she spent taking care of the gardens from season to season. she seemed to have fresh vegetables to serve with a full course evening meal, no one left the table hungry in her kitchen. The kitchen was never left dirty. I would watch this amazing woman sit in her chair in the living room after a full day of tasks and nod off to sleep. Later came bed time. I sure she went to bed thinking about what she had to do tomorrow. Maybe she could fit in the sewing for the bridesdresses that were due for next week. In the years that follow there were many times that I can remember her sewing for Becky for a dance, and making drapes for a room. Ms. Pauline was a gentle soul, always a kind word and a smile. I am very grateful I had someone like her in my corner, she fits at the top of my list, along side with my mother, Katie Burleson. I think they will keep each other company. The world is a sadder place with Ms Pauline gone and I know her family will truly miss her...so will I.##imported-begin##Penny Smith, Daugther in Law##imported-end##
